HIGH TIDES TAKE TOLL OF CLAPPER RAIL

The Commission of Game and Inland Fisheries has just completed a study of the effects of high tides in May and June on the clapper rail population of the Eastern Shore of Virginia. It was found that during mid-May high tides destroyed numerous nests of this game bird which builds in the tidal marshes. On June 8, and 9, not only a considerable number of nests, but also many young birds were victims of the high tides.

After this survey was made under the supervision of R. O. Halstead, supervising warden of the Hampton Roads District, it was recommended to Executive Director R. T. Quinn of the Game Commission that in the opinion of the Eastern Shore game wardens and Mr. Halstead the season on these game birds be curtailed and the bag limit be lowered.
